OBAMACARE NUMBERS UP

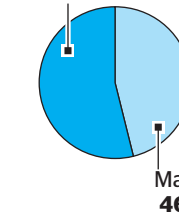

The latest enrollment data from the Obama administration show that 88,602 people in Illinois have enrolled in a health insurance plan under the Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare.

More are signing up—but numbers remain short of state, national goals

Chicago Tribune

Another strong month of sign-ups in new health insurance policies created under President Obama's health care law pushed Illinois' total enrollment to 88,602 through Feb. 1, bringing the state on target with initial federal projections.

Nationwide, more than 1.1 million Americans selected a private plan in the past month, bringing the total number enrolled in coverage since the marketplaces opened in October to nearly 3.3 million, according to federal data released Wednesday.

The administration also reported a modest uptick in the enrollment of young people, a key demographic group coveted by insurers because they are typically healthier and spend less on health care.

"It was a really solid month," said Dan Mendelson, chief executive officer at Avalere Health LLC, a Washington-based consulting firm tracking the exchanges. "Among the positives are that more men applied in January, meaning that gender disparity is evening out. The population is getting younger, too, so those two things are on the right track."

Despite the surge of sign-ups, the disastrous launch of the Affordable Care Act's open-enrollment period in October leaves the nationwide figures short of the administration's goal to have 4.4 million people signed up by the end of January, according to a September Health and Human Services memo.

And although 27,491 Illinoisans selected new private health plans during the month, the state remains far off the pace to meet its own internal goal of signing up 300,000 consumers by the end of March.

The data show that the marketplaces still remain more popular among older and potentially less healthy consumers, a trend that the Obama administration expected, but also one that threatens to push up monthly premiums in the future unless more young people enroll.

About 56 percent of those who signed up in Illinois were age 45 or older.

10 reasons 'House of Cards' should be your valentine

Kate Bernot

kbemot@tribune.com
@kbemot

Unless you have a dinner date with a mashup of Adam Levine's body and James Franco's face, there's no reason not to spend Feb. 14 binge-watching Netflix's second season of "House of Cards." I'm surprised people even need reminding that Kevin Spacey, a medium sausage pizza and a bottle of Trader Joe's wine is the most romantic love triangle imaginable. For the skeptics, though, my Top 10 reasons to stay in with

"House of Cards" this Valentine's Day:

1. No dress code required

Yes, Claire Underwood (Robin Wright) has an endless supply of incredibly tailored sheath dresses, but that doesn't mean you need to wear more than sweatpants and a hoodie while watching. Dressing up for dinner out starts to sound... exhausting.

2. You can cook a themed dinner

Feeling ambitious? How about some barbecue à la Freddy (Reg E. Cathey) and a few mini-bar bottles of bourbon à la Peter Russo (Corey Stoll).

3. It gets your heart racing

Tell me those first dark, moody beats of the intro music—dum, dum, dum, trumpets—don't make your pulse quicken.

4. Everyone is outrageously (conventionally) beautiful

The acting is top-notch and the pacing is incredible, but if you're just into ogling beautiful people on TV, "House of Cards" has that covered.

5. Frank Underwood's (Kevin Spacey) accent

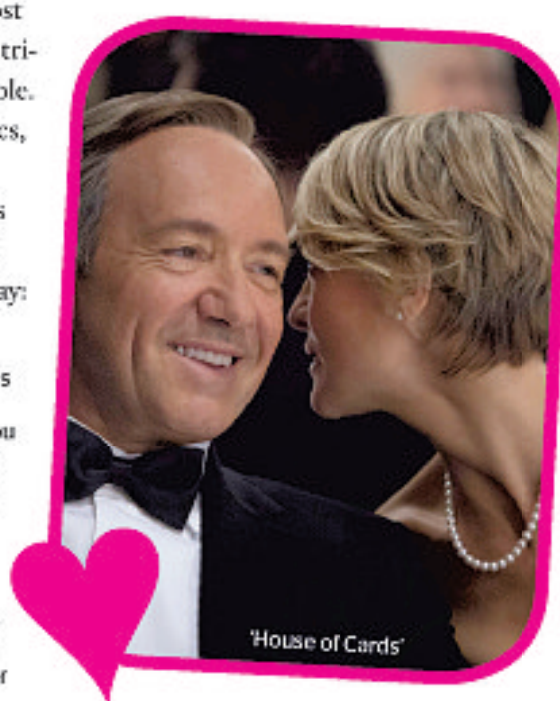

This deserves its own bullet point.

6. It's a no-pressure date idea

Invite that cute friend over. Does he seem into the show? Into you? Bingo. Not so much? Then he has crappy taste, anyway. Forget him and continue ogling the pretty people.

7. It's free, baby

Well, if you have Netflix. If you don't have Netflix, I'd bet a cookie that one of your friends does. And even if you bring over a six-pack of beer to thank that friend for letting you mooch, that's still cheaper than dinner out.

8. It's way more intriguing than real life

Suspend belief for a moment and travel to the steamy world of surreptitious art museum meetings, weeklong trysts with foreign-born photographers and hazy shots of Zoe's (Kate Mara) butt.

9. Frank Underwood's accent

So nice I listed it twice.

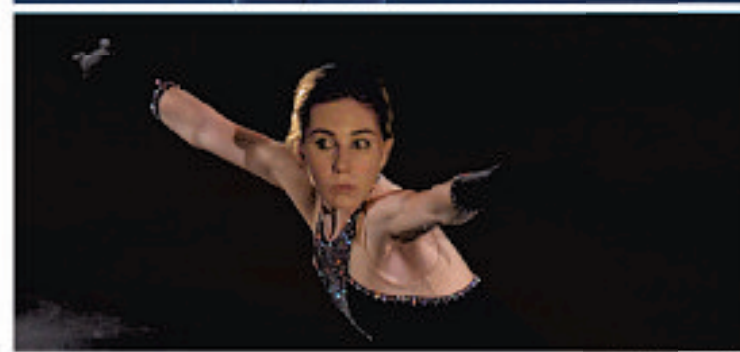

10. Sabotage is sexy

Oh, the backstabbing! The power dynamics! The treachery in Louboutins! Frank Underwood himself said it in Season 1: "Everything is about sex, except sex. Sex is about power."

Nesting site targeted

Birders shocked to hear Lincoln Park trees will be cut down due to disease

Chicago Tribune

Several dozen mature trees in Lincoln Park revered by some as the seasonal nesting site of a species of heron will be cut down during the next two years because of disease and other problems, Chicago Park District officials announced Wednesday.

Bird experts were delighted and surprised when the normally people-averse black-crowned night heron chose Lincoln Park as its main breeding ground in the state, but the species rarely seen in Illinois now faces a challenge from its urban environment.

A total of 57 mature trees in Lincoln Park, most of which have been the spring and summer nesting site for the stocky, black-backed, yellow-legged herons will be cut down along a tree-lined walkway on the south end of the park, Parks District officials announced at a Lincoln Park Advisory Council meeting Wednesday night.

Almost half of the "severely diseased and condemned trees" near the park's Benjamin Franklin monument will be cut down this year and the rest through 2015, according to Jason Steger, natural areas manager for the Chicago Park District's Department of Cultural and Natural Resources. The ones cut down as well as others that have died previously will be replanted in the fall, Steger said.

The Urban Wildlife Institute counted 250 nesting pairs last summer in Lincoln Park, according to Mason Fidino, coordinator of wildlife management at the Lincoln Park Zoo's Urban Wildlife Institute. The zoo has been monitoring the herons since they showed up in the park around 2008. That makes about 500 birds, 40 percent of which nest in the walkway where the trees will be cut down, Fidino said. Most of the 57 trees have nests on them, each with an average of 12 nests, with one to seven eggs inside.

"It is a sad thing that is going to happen, and this really shows how difficult it is to manage areas for both wildlife and people," Fidino said.

More than sad, to some birders, the announcement is a shock. These birds are easy to see in Chicago because of their habitat in Lincoln Park, but they are rare to see anywhere else outside the Chicago area, said Steve Bailey, an ornithologist at the Illinois Natural History Survey. Historically, he said, they have been endangered due to a loss of their nesting and foraging habitat.

"That is a shock to me. I can hardly believe they're doing it," Bailey said.

Cubs owner seeks peace with rooftops

Chicago Tribune

MESA, Ariz. With the backdrop of a new $84 million spring training facility with the support of Mesa mayor Scott Smith, Cubs owner Tom Ricketts expressed hope Wednesday that the team could reach a resolution with the Wrigley Field rooftop owners.

The progress that Ricketts and executive Crane Kenney expressed at the Cubs Convention last month has been stalled by threats to sue that have temporarily halted the Cubs' plans to renovate Wrigley Field.

But Ricketts, who was in town with several team executives for a ribbon-cutting ceremony at Cubs Park, downplayed speculation that any incident led to a lack of more progress.

"I don't think anything, in particular, happened," Ricketts said. "I think we're just working through ideas that might work for everyone."

"The key is look at this place here. When people work together, and they really focus on what they can accomplish together, you see great results. This is a great example of that."

4 years for attack on good Samaritan

One of two men charged with beating up and stabbing a Cook County prosecutor who had come to the defense of a gay couple being harassed on the lakefront has been sentenced Tuesday to four years in prison, according to prosecutors and court records. The prosecutor saw two men approach a gay couple, punch one of them and shout at them, prosecutors said. The prosecutor yelled at them to stop, and they then turned on him.

Robbery suspect turns himself in

A suspect was in custody Wednesday in the attempted robbery of an off-duty Cook County sheriff's sergeant who fatally shot one of the two other robbers during the Monday night holdup at a Far South Side gas station, authorities told the Tribune. The suspect is a 17-year-old boy who, accompanied by a lawyer, turned himself in to police after he saw himself on TV when surveillance video footage went viral.

Man dies week after jumping from fire

A man who jumped from the fourth floor of a West Side hotel to escape a blaze earlier this month has died from his injuries, according to officials. Roy Harmon, 53, of the 1800 block of West Jackson Street, was pronounced dead at 12:35 p.m. Tuesday at Stroger Hospital, according to the Cook County medical examiner's office. The fire started about 8 a.m. Feb. 3 in a room at the Royalton Hotel where Harmon lived. TRIBUNE

Judge's ruling chips away at Kentucky's gay marriage ban

5 Same-sex marriage may soon be coming to the South.

A federal judge struck down part of Kentucky's same-sex marriage ban Wednesday, joining a string of similar rulings in conservative states that have put the future of the country's remaining bans in doubt.

District Judge John G. Heyburn ordered that Kentucky recognize same-sex marriages that had been legally performed in other states and opened the door wide for activists to strike down Kentucky's ban entirely.

No federal judge has ruled in favor of such bans since a landmark U.S. Supreme Court decision on the issue last summer. Recent judicial decisions have overturned or chipped away at state laws banning gay marriage that once passed with the great popular support of voters and state legislatures.

It wasn't immediately clear how Heyburn's ruling will be received in deeply conservative Kentucky, whose voters approved a constitutional ban on same-sex marriage in 2004 with 74 percent of the vote.

The judge, an appointee of President George H.W. Bush, perhaps aware of the outrage his ruling might raise, connected his arguments against the state's ban with allusions to the country's past civil rights struggles against sexism and racism.

Protecting tradition, Heyburn wrote, no matter how ancient or deeply held, was not good enough of defense for laws that create different rules for different groups of people.

"In time, even the most strident supporters of these views understood that they could not enforce their particular moral views to the detriment of another's constitutional rights. Here as well, sometime in the not too distant future, the same understanding will come to pass."

Kentucky joins Utah and Oklahoma in a small avalanche of similar findings by state and federal judges across the country who have followed a legal path tenuously laid out by a U.S. Supreme Court ruling last summer.

Castaway fisherman now back at home

7 SAN SALVADOR A fisherman from El Salvador who says he spent more than a year adrift in the Pacific Ocean arrived home Tuesday night and was barely able to speak, sobbing as dozens of curiosity-seekers craned for a glimpse of the famous castaway.

Jorge Salvador Alvarenga, 36, told officials he washed ashore in the Marshall Islands at the end of January and said he survived the ordeal by drinking turtle blood and catching fish and birds with his bare hands.

"I can't find any words to say," an emotional Alvarenga said on landing at the airport in the capital, San Salvador, where he was reunited with family before being taken to a local hospital in a wheelchair for further tests.

While the exact dates remain unclear, Alvarenga is believed to have set sail on a shark fishing trip from southern Mexico in late December 2012, before being blown out to sea, drifting for months and washing up some 6,200 miles away in the Marshall Islands.

'YOUR TEAM SUCKS!'

Not that they say that, but Hawks don't have to play nice in Sochi

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

The talent on the Blackhawks roster is undeniable. The team has hoisted two Stanley Cups in four years, and now 10 of its players are headed to Russia to play in the Olympics. Five countries will be represented by the Hawks: the U.S., Canada, Sweden, Slovakia and the Czech Republic. RedEye caught up with eight of them ahead of their inevitable head-to-head battles. Let the trash-talking begin. LVIVANCO@TRIBUNE.COM | @LVIVANCO

Fighting on the ice during an Olympic game is ____.

Patrick Sharp (Canada): Not the smartest thing you could do.

Michal Rozsival (Czech Republic): It is illegal, I think, but it's something that on an international level you don't want to do.

Michal Handzus (Slovakia): Fun.

Marian Hossa (Slovakia): I'll skip this one.

Niklas Hjalmarsson (Sweden): Not allowed, I guess.

Marcus Kruger (Sweden): You probably get suspended. I'm not sure but I think it's ... it's not a lot of fighting going on in Europe and it's more European rules there.

Johnny Oduya (Sweden): Not allowed.

Patrick Kane (USA): It's illegal.

US PRESSWIRE

What will you miss most about Chicago while in Sochi?

Sharp: The food for sure, television and my kids. They're not going to go over there with me. It'll be tough to wake up every day without my girls.

Rozsival: I don't really know what it is like in Sochi, but from what I've heard, it's going to be probably the good food around here. I definitely won't miss the cold weather right now.

Handzus: I'm sure the family, but they will come over there too. Then, the city, the restaurants, obviously the teammates and the NHL.

Hossa: My family. We just had a newborn, so it's going to be tough to travel there.

Hjalmarsson: That's going to be the food. I love all the restaurants ... in the city. It's unbelievable.

Kruger: I don't really know how it's going to be there in Sochi. I haven't looked into that too much. But I'm sure I'm going to miss the people here, the friends I've got and all of this.

Oduya: Restaurants, obviously. I've been to Russia a couple times and it's been good and bad experiences with restaurants. Obviously here you'll have the food at the Olympic Village so I will eat there. But at times it will be nice to maybe go somewhere else and have a nice meal.

Kane: The first thing that comes to mind is probably the food.

When playing against your teammates, will you: A) try not to hurt them, B) trash talk, C) gloat if you win or D) all of the above?

Sharp: All of the above. I was going to say B and C for sure, but I don't want to hurt anybody.

Rozsival: Probably D, a little bit of everything. It'll be just a little trash talk, but I figure it's going to be in a fun way.

Handzus: I never trash talk much. I don't hurt people so I try to beat them.

Hossa: Probably like in my games, none of them. Maybe just in a faceoff, I'll just joke a little bit, you know, and have fun a little bit with, let's say [we play] Kaner and Team USA. But no trash talk, nothing like that.

Hjalmarsson: I'll just do another option. Just win the game.

Kruger: Probably everything, D.

Oduya: I would probably gloat if I win.

Kane: Probably trash talk. That's what happened last time so I'm guessing it's going to happen this time.

Which Winter Olympics event are you dying to try and why?

Sharp: Not the bobsled or luge or skeleton; that's scary. Skiing is a little too fast for me too. I'd say speed skating is closest to home for me.

Rozsival: I like the bobsled. I haven't done it. It just looks kind of dangerous, a really high adrenaline sport. There's a lot of speed. I'd like to try that.

US bobsled
GETTY IMAGES

Handzus: I love skiing. So skiing would be fun.

Hossa: The cool thing about the Olympics is meeting lots of cool athletes who are there. I know it's going to be hard timewise, but I would definitely like to see some of the events.

Hjalmarsson: I've always liked sitting at home and watch[ing] cross-country skiing. I enjoy that, but I don't think it's that much fun to watch live, standing out there in the cold. Live—maybe curling. Sweden's got a pretty good curling team. It's hard.

Kruger: I haven't done it for a long time now because I play hockey, but skiing downhill.

Oduya: I've tried curling before. I wasn't very good. And it was really cold. Maybe try to do that again and get a little bit better at it.

Kane: I guess my favorite event besides hockey would have to be the halfpipe in snowboarding. I used to ski. I've never snowboarded. I bet it'd be tough, but I like watching it—the Flying Tomato, you know.

| 1 | Who should fill in for Bob Costas in the Olympics anchor chair? | Raises hand Remembers he doesn't care about the Olympics Lowers hand | Harry Potter. He already wears the glasses, so no one would know the difference. | Christina Aguilera. She will spin around in it smiling. | Gov. Chris Christie was my choice for a similar question, and 50 pounds later he is my choice for this one too. | One of his robot twins, of course. What, you think we made only one of those? |
| 2 | Why are the Dutch so good at speedskating? | The explanation is found in the English translation to the opening of Def Leppard's "Rock of Ages." | Have you seen the clogs they have to balance on as children? | Because they already make great slow cookers. ZING! | Because they have heavily relaxed anxiety. | That's what happens when you completely ignore real sports like football. |
| 3 | Figure skating is to the Olympics as ... | ... sorry, you said figure skating and I started spacing out. | ... watching golf is to napping. | ... Samuel L. Jackson is to Laurence Fishburne. | ... fruit is to the loom. | ... I am to taking over the world! MWAHAHA! |
| 4 | What was Jay Cutler thinking when Jerry Angelo called him "Inconsistent in the clutch"? | "Crap. He's right. I should do better. Nah, I just got a big contract. Whatever." | "What do you mean? My wife is pregnant with our second child!" | He immediately thought, "Crutch?" | "I would look so cool right now if I had a cig in my mouth." | "That guy is sooooo getting an anonymous malware message from me." |
| 5 | What does Joakim Noah mean when he says the Bulls draw strength from Derrick Rose? | It involves needles, fangs and ... I've said too much already. | Gotta be the shoes. | When they see him, they're like, "That could be me, better play it safe." | He obviously meant that D-Rose has mastered Senjutsu. | They're using the same style of bionic knee. |

Kate Hansen

All the single lugers, put your hands up!*Slider's pre-race Beyonce dance routine goes viral*Chicago Tribune

Kate Hansen did not win a medal in women's luge, but she certainly won the Internet.

A video of the California native dancing before her race has gone viral, prompting thousands of YouTube hits and earning a shoutout from her hero Beyonce Knowles.

"Honestly, in my world, I don't care who's staring," the 21-year-old slider said. "I'm still going to dance."

And it seems like lots of people have been staring. The video has become so popular, the Russian crowd chanted, "Dance! Dance! Dance!" as she completed her final run Tuesday.

Hansen, who finished 10th, jams to a strictly Beyonce playlist before races because it "gets me fierce, and I get stoked." Her fandom apparently has caught the singer's attention, too, as Knowles posted a story about Hansen's dance moves on her official Facebook page Tuesday and wished her luck.

"Go Kate!" the singer wrote.

Not everyone, however, is charmed by Hansen's ability to bust a move. NBC commentator Duncan Kennedy—a former Olympian who is also the U.S. Luge Association's technical director—criticized her pre-race warmup Monday.

"I would like to see something a little more sports-specific from her," Kennedy said. "What you see out of the top runners, the really heavy hitters, is they're working those start muscles, they're working the low back, they're working the arms and the shoulders and getting the power out of them. ... And while that might be a very good, general warmup, I'm not sure it gets the job done for medal contention."

Hansen, who attends Brigham Young University, had turned off her phone before Monday's competition so she had not seen the Internet's reaction to her dancing or its disdain for Kennedy's criticisms. Hansen smiled and shrugged at Kennedy's comments.

She has been busting a move before competitions since she broke her foot during team selection races in October. The injury prevented her from running, so she danced to warm up her muscles instead.

"I've danced before every race this season," she said. "I have nothing to be ashamed of."

Hansen was considerably more animated when discussing Beyonce—whom she has never met but still refers to as "my girl Bey"—and the singer's Facebook shoutout.

Now that she has Beyonce's attention, does she think it's possible they could meet someday? The mere thought overwhelmed Hansen, who has memorized the choreography to every Sasha Fierce song.

"I would go into cardiac arrest if I met Beyonce," she said.

COLD RUSH

Each day during the Sochi Olympics, we'll share what's giving us chills—good or bad.

Shani Davis
MCT

Sorry, Shani

It's been a bad week for potential three-peats. First Shaun White finished fourth in the men's halfpipe, and on Wednesday, Chicago's Shani Davis failed to win a third straight gold in the 1,000 meters in speedskating. Davis finished eighth.

"I just got my ass kicked," he said. "There's no excuse. It was nothing physical that went wrong. I just simply didn't have the speed and the lap and that's something that I've always had over my competitors."

The Netherlands took two medals in the race, with Stefan Groothuis winning gold in 1:08.39 and Michel Mulder winning bronze in 1:08.74. Canada's Denny Morrison took silver in 1:08.43. Mulder won the 500m earlier in the Games.

She's snowboarding royalty now

It wasn't supposed to end up this way, but Kaitlyn Farrington is glad it did. The U.S. snowboarder defeated favorites Kelly Clark and Torah Bright to win the women's halfpipe on Wednesday.

Her second-run score of 91.75 gave her a narrow win over Australia's Bright (91.50). Clark, also of the U.S., won bronze (90.75), just edging U.S. teammate Hannah Teter.

Not only did Farrington have to go through qualifying, semifinals and the final, six runs in all, she beat the past three Olympic champions, Bright, Teter and Clark.

"It was crazy. Sitting at the bottom, I was stoked," Farrington said. "I landed my run and to have to watch all the other Olympians come down, I was stoked I landed my run."

Faster, higher, stronger, sexier ...

If you've always suspected Olympic athletes are a horny bunch, well, you're absolutely right. "Tinder in the Olympic Village is next level," snowboarding slopestyle gold medalist Jamie Anderson told Us Weekly. "It's all athletes! ... There was a point where I had to be like OK, this is way too distracting. I deleted my account to focus on the Olympics."

The clock don't lie

Turns out, there is tying in skiing.

Switzerland's Dominique Gisin and Slovenia's Tina Maze shared the gold in the women's downhill Wednesday. Both finished in 1:41.57 to produce the first gold-medal tie in Olympic Alpine skiing history.

There had been four previous Olympic Alpine ties, the most recent in 1998.

Michael Jordan can now field a full basketball team of offspring. His wife, Yvette, gave birth to twin girls, Victoria and Ysabel, on Sunday, enline.com reported Tuesday. Jordan, who will turn 51 on Feb. 17, has two sons, Jeffrey and Marcus, and a daughter, Jasmine, with ex-wife Juanita.

Swimsuits in a bunch

Barbie is no Kate Upton.

Despite confusion on the Internet on Wednesday, Barbie is not the cover girl of 2014's Sports Illustrated Swimsuit issue. An illustration featuring the iconic doll on the cover of SI circulated Wednesday, with many mistaking the promotion, paid for by Mattel, for the actual cover of the issue.

As the New York Times reported, the promotional cover will be wrapped around 1,000 copies of the issue, but the real cover girl remains to be seen. The actual cover will be revealed Thursday on "Jimmy Kimmel Live!"

Putting his career to bed

After what no doubt has been a Hall of Fame career, N.Y. Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter announced Wednesday that the 2014 season will be his last in the majors. Which begs the question: Will he retire his rumored practice of handing out gift baskets to his bedroom conquests as well?

Three Chicago companies debut new works at Steppenwolf's Garage Rep

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

In 1998, when Steppenwolf Theatre Company added an 80-seat black box theater adjacent to its main theater's parking garage, part of its mission was to provide a space for visiting companies to mount fresh pieces.

Fast forward to 2009: The Garage Rep series, a rotating roster of plays by three visiting Chicago storefront companies selected from a pool of applicants to appeal to 20- to 35-year-old audiences, was born. The proposals can include original scripts, devised works (meaning it's created collaboratively by the cast) or existing plays, but are never a remount of a show that the company has already produced. The three featured plays are produced with mentorship from Steppenwolf and appear for 10 weeks in rotating repertory.

GARAGE REP

Go: 8 p.m. Friday through April 20 at Steppenwolf Theatre, 1650 N. Halsted St.

Tickets: $20 per show or $45 for a three-play pass. 312-335-1650; steppenwolf.org

Past plays have included Buzz22 Chicago's Dungeons & Dragons-themed "She Kills Monsters" (2013), XIII Pocket's "Adore" (2010)—a cannibal love story inspired by true-life headlines—and The Inconvenience's "Hit the Wall" (2012), a Stonewall Riots play which sold out its world premiere Garage Rep run and moved to Off-Broadway the following spring.

This year, the New Colony, Prologue Theatre Company and Walkabout Theater Company are the featured ensembles for the Garage Rep series. We checked in with each to find out more.

'Saturday Night/Sunday Morning'

Prologue Theatre Company

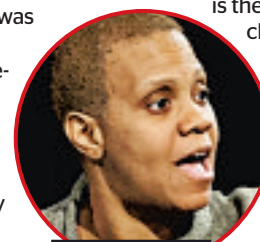

The company, which was formed in 2008 to showcase underrepresented voices—women, people of color, LGBTQ stories—presents the Chicago premiere of this dramedy by Tennessee-born, New York-based playwright Katori Hall ("The Mountaintop") about a group of young, WWII-era African-American women in a Memphis beauty parlor and boarding house who share stories of their soldiers while they get gorgeous for the weekend. But as their stories evolve, they must face their uncertain futures when—and if—their men return.

"One of the pitfalls of this show is the tendency to make the characters stereotypical," director TaRon Patton said. "There is a lot of humor in this piece, and if you play for laughs, the lives of these beautiful people are diminished."

So how did she overcome this challenge? "Me and the cast spent time really learning about the true circumstances of these people and the city of Memphis in 1945 during WWII," she said. "We found the perfect balance of entertainment and truth."

'Rewilding Genius'

The New Colony

"We wanted to create a show about Millennials, for Millennials, by Millennials—so 'Rewilding Genius' is probably one of the most personal shows we have ever created," said the company's artistic director Andrew Hobgood, who serves as the play's director and—with ensemble member Megan Johns—the co-writer. "The opportunity to work with Steppenwolf to develop it even further into the kind of no-holds-barred experience they are known for is absolutely incredible."

Andrew Hobgood

The play is set in an Uptown loft where "self-identified geniuses, cyber-vigilantes, hacktivists and anarchists" plot against enemies in an attempt to change the world. So what was their jumping-off point when creating this story? "I looked back at the very first draft that we started writing on Feb. 2, 2013," Hobgood said, "and the first scene we wrote ended up being the first scene we re-wrote for the Garage Rep production: Lily asking Ged to visit her family with her. This scene is now the first scene of Act I following the prologue."

Cast and crew rehearse for 'The Wild'

'The Wild'

Walkabout Theater Company

This world-premiere devised work incorporates the company's mission of exploring ways to create and present theater outside of traditional forms. "As an ensemble, we have found our relationship with spoken text to be slippery and fluid, both incredibly challenging and deeply rewarding," said artistic director Kendra Miller, who serves as the new play's dramaturg. "We began 'The Wild' by searching for a contemporary American author whose words could open up the deeply personal nature of our physical work and free us to take it further."

The ensemble chose playwright Charles Mee, who offers some of his texts for free through The (Re)making Project on his website—with the condition that theater companies rearrange the text to create a new work.

"As the process of creating 'The Wild' has evolved, we have remixed and reworked Mee's words, choosing those that spoke most deeply to us as artists and people and folding them into the arc of the piece," Miller said. "Using three of his plays as our jumping-off points and Euripides' 'The Bacchae,' we are diving into an exploration of savagery, civilization, Dionysian rituals of worship, boundaries, playing with fire, self-sacrifice, the joyful frenzy of violence and deep sorrow, the hunt for a god, sparagmos—tearing something apart—and attempting to put it back together, among many other things."

Japonais reboots

By Samantha Nelson

FOR REDEYE

After closing for renovations at the end of December, River North restaurant Japonais reopened Feb. 5 as Japonais by Morimoto.

“Iron Chef” star Masaharu Morimoto has restaurants around the world, but this is his first outing in the Midwest. “Chicago is a great food town with so many talented chefs,” he said. “I wanted to open a restaurant in Chicago for some time now, and when I met the Japonais team and [got a better] understanding their history and passion, I knew that it was a great fit for me. Now I have an opportunity to bring my style of cooking to this great culinary city.”

The menu is entirely new, offering

Morimoto’s signature Asian fusion fare with dishes incorporating a mix of local and imported items. “I am looking forward to the spring in Chicago to visit the farmer’s markets to incorporate more items,” Morimoto said.

The beverage program features cocktails designed by mixologist Shingo Gokan, plus a large variety of Japanese whiskeys. You’ll also find shochu, beer and full sake and wine lists.

Morimoto said the renovated space has a “sophisticated look” with an elevated sushi bar and an open kitchen that showcases the preparation and plating of food. The restaurant also has a new shochu bar and a private party room.

Eye-popping design creations hit Target

Tribune newspapers

Peter Pilotto is one of those rare fashion-insider brands that land on Cate Blanchett, Kerry Washington, Sandra Bullock and Michelle Obama while rarely falling into flashier, tackier hands.

Though not a household name, the brand, designed by Pilotto and Christopher De Vos, is widely regarded as one of the most inventive on today's runways. Pioneers in applying 3-D digital technology to fabric a few years back, Pilotto and De Vos proceeded to mix and clash high-definition prints and patterns in what became one of the most influential trends of the past decade.

Now the pair have extended their vision to Target. This week, their limited-edition collection of 70 pieces hit stores nationwide and target.com.

Beyond the U.S., a smaller Peter Pilotto for Target selection is available at the British luxury site net-a-porter.com, an unprecedented collaboration between the retailers.

In the Target assortment, Peter Pilotto fans may recognize a couple of prints and silhouettes from the collection archives. But Pilotto and De Vos didn't just recycle old designs at lower cost.

With retail prices ranging from $14.99 to $79.99, budgetary constraints begot creative solutions, such as less intricately engineered prints, layered and pieced together to achieve an illusion of depth.

"Our brand is about print, yes, but it's also about the emotional feeling you can get from color and color combinations," Pilotto said.

While imposing some limits, the collaboration with a mass retailer afforded them the freedom to dabble in more playful categories such as swimwear, sunglasses, totes and towels.

The youthful spirit carries through to a strapless red iris-print Jacquard dress ($79.99), black-and-white Rash Guard shirt ($29.99), sleeveless red floral/stripe dress ($39.99), mixed-print sweatshirt ($29.99), shorts in a blue netting print ($29.99) and Vans-like green floral slip-on shoes ($29.99). But the collection isn't just for the young.

"The great thing about this collection is it will appeal to a wide audience, from a 15-year-old to a 75-year-old," De Vos said. "Everyone can find something for their wardrobe."

Bullock added to the anticipation of the Target debut when she wore a blue-and-green print Peter Pilotto resort dress to the People's Choice Awards.

A recent string of runway successes doesn't hurt the buzz. The style.com critique of the Peter Pilotto fall 2013 runway collection began simply: "A triumph, pretty much."

Target fully expects the same in its stores.

Orchid show breathes new life into winter

Chicago Tribune

It's not southwest Florida's Fakahatchee swamp, exactly, inside the Chicago Botanic Garden public greenhouse building known as the Regenstein Center.

But inside the Regenstein's south and east greenhouses these days, it is dank enough that you might call it swamplike—but without all the standing water, the insects or the alligators.

It is especially like the Fakahatchee for the flowers it will be featuring for the next month: orchids.

If people know about the Fakahatchee, it is as an orchid habitat, and they know this from the movie expanding on Susan Orleans' book "The Orchid Thief," "Adaptation."

For the botanic garden's first big, annual orchid show, the Regenstein is being stuffed artfully with some 10,000 members of the Orchidaceae family: orchids wedged into nooks in real-looking artificial trees, orchids formed into a botanical chandelier that will be raised toward the glass roof, orchids in black dirt, on architectural columns, in photographs on the banners all around the place.

The botanic garden hopes to lure Chicagoans with this flower show, designed to be, as one executive put it, "a signature event during the shoulder season." It also will be the kick-starter, the institution hopes, for its own orchid collection. It is trying to raise the money to build growing capacity for the superstar flowers, revered for their unending variety, arresting shapes and colors and extraordinary ability to grow in trees. But for the first show, the garden spent about $180,000 to bring in the flowers from Hawaii, California, Florida and, yes, Illinois.

Love and backstabbing

There's a 'House of Cards' quote for every stage of your romance

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

« cwagner@tribune.com »
« @showpatrol »

Anyone who has seen "House of Cards" probably doesn't associate the hit political thriller with romance. But Netflix is releasing all 13 episodes of Season 2 on Valentine's Day, which got us thinking:

Taken out of context, many of the best Season 1 quotes from cutthroat Congressman Frank Underwood, his steely wife Claire and reporter Zoe Barnes might be mistaken for lovely bon mots between sweethearts at some point in a relationship.

Let's make love

"I'm feeling hungry today."
—Frank Underwood (Kevin Spacey)

Your pickup line didn't work

"If I was gonna [bleep] you, you'd know it."
—Zoe Barnes (Kate Mara)

But wait, it did

"Once someone is exposed, they're at your mercy."
—Frank Underwood

That's what she said

"I know how to handle him."
—Zoe Barnes

It's OK; it happens to everyone

"It only takes 10 seconds to crush a man's ambitions."
—Frank Underwood

True love

"I love that woman. I love her more than sharks love blood."
—Frank Underwood

Total devotion

"Behind every great man is a woman with blood on her hands."
—Frank Underwood

Talk of kids

"I'm not going to lie. I despise children. There, I said it."
—Frank Underwood

Kate Mara

Kevin Spacey

Robin Wright

Dating for a while

"We're part of a mutual admiration society."
—Zoe Barnes

Spicing up the relationship

"I like Irons, but I love fire."
—Claire Underwood (Robin Wright)

Even spicier

"Everything is about sex. Except sex. Sex is about power."
—Frank Underwood

We're breaking up

"You will be cleaved from the herd and left to die in the wilderness."
—Frank Underwood

Why we're breaking up

"Insecurity bores me."
—Frank Underwood

We've broken up; leave me alone

"Am I really the sort of enemy you want to make?"
—Claire Underwood

Unwanted pregnancy

"I'm willing to let your child wither and die inside you if that's required."
—Claire Underwood (Season 2, Episode 1)

'Smallville's' Supergirl gets 'Bitten'

MCT
Ever since she was a little girl, actress Laura Vandervoort has chased perfection. While she wishes she could escape it, she understands that it's shaped her life.

It led her to triumph in martial arts, earning a second-degree black belt, and it propelled her into the acting field.

It turned out that both skills earned her a starring role in Syfy's edgy version of the werewolf legend, "Bitten," airing Monday nights.

"No one's as hard on me as I am," she said. "And I get nervous or stressed out or anxiety before a scene or before stunts. This time I just told myself to suck it up and go to work. Once you get through it and you realize not only did you get through it, but the producers and the writers and directors are all thrilled, that's a great feeling."

She studied karate from ages 6 to 20. She also aced her grades and coaxed her parents into letting her try acting after she saw "My Girl" on TV. "It was the first movie that affected me, and I was crying as a kid. And I never experienced that, watching a program on TV. I think that's the moment I asked my parents if I could try acting because the young girl in the movie was making me feel that way."

Vandervoort, now 29, is one of those rare child performers who managed to transition easily into adult roles. Born and raised in Canada, Vandervoort was reluctant to move to L.A. Finally, six years ago, when a relationship went sour, she was determined to make the change.

"Three years ago I really committed to being here, but six years ago I started renting a place on my own and then went back and forth to Canada because I wasn't sure. Then three years ago saying, 'OK, I'm buying furniture,' " she said.

Though most in the entertainment industry saw her as a child actress from shows like "Goosebumps," "Are You Afraid of the Dark?" and Disney projects, she managed to erase that stereotype when she was cast as Supergirl on "Smallville."

"Multiple times I wanted to quit," she said. "There are ebbs and flows in the industry and also transitioning from child actor into an adult actor was a challenge, having the casting people see me in a different way. And there were periods when you'd go without work for a year and you start to question what you're doing. 'Why am I here? I move mountains to try to do this.'"

She was in the verge of quitting when her agent phoned to coax her to audition for "Smallville." I said, " 'Yes, it's going to be the last one.' So I put myself on tape and then a week later they wanted me to fly out and test for it, and then I had the job. And since 'Smallville' it's been go."

Westminster goes down to the wire

Sky, a wire fox terrier
GETTY IMAGES PHOTOS

A wire fox terrier named Sky won "best in show" at the 138th Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show in New York on Tuesday, besting canines in six other groups at one of the oldest sporting events in the country. Do you really need to know anything else? Of course not, so here are some pictures of some of the show's most adorable pooches. REUTERS

Oscars' best picture nominees have roots in the past

Los Angeles Times

The best picture race is tight, and each awards ceremony leading up to the Oscars on March 2 has made it only tighter. To assess the chances of this year's nominees, we look for any similarities with winners from years past and compare styles, themes and characters to see if the nominees match up to proven Oscar pleasers.

TWO OF A KIND?

'American Hustle'

A couple of con artists get in way over their heads, and then get out with aplomb, even making the bigwig look like a big fool. Both "American Hustle" and 1973's "The Sting" are period pieces with femmes fatales and costumes to die for, and they share a hustle within a hustle that keeps everyone on their toes.

'Philomena'

The story of an unlikely friendship between opposites that blooms along the road shares a kinship with 1989 winner "Driving Miss Daisy." As with "Daisy," a bitter history of oppression looms out of the rearview mirror to haunt Philomena, played by Judi Dench.

'Nebraska'

Like 1988's winning "Rain Man," "Nebraska" heads out on a road trip with two reluctant family members, one of whom needs constant supervision. They initially strike out for the promise of monetary gain, but the journey becomes much deeper along the way.

'Captain Phillips'

As was 1997's "Titanic," this film is based on a true story of terror at sea. Though the elements the Maersk Alabama captain must battle are of a different nature, they are as relentless as that iceberg. The Somali pirates may even be more frightening than Billy Zane as a villainous fiancé.

'12 Years a Slave'

For bringing a historical horror to the screen in a way we've never seen, "12 Years a Slave" closely resonates with "Schindler's List." Both true stories, both painful to watch, they also share a sadistic, powerful psychopath and a hero who does whatever it takes to survive with his soul intact.

'Dallas Buyers Club'

Social and political outcasts become wary allies in the face of life-and-death stakes in "Dallas Buyers Club." In another era, facing harsh intolerance of another kind, "In the Heat of the Night" features characters similarly maligned and aligned.

'Her'

A lonely man brings forth a delightful creature who didn't really exist before he met her. As she evolves exponentially, she bypasses his wildest expectations, as well as her own. Sounds a bit like "My Fair Lady," winner in 1964.

'The Wolf of Wall Street'

Exploring the American Dream as it morphs into absolute corruption,

"Wolf" resembles 1972's "The Godfather" on cocaine. And Quaaludes. And morphine. And, well, just about every drug that can be ingested and a few that probably can't. Just substitute hookers for cannoli.

'Gravity'

If only we could go on titles alone, 1953's winner "From Here to Eternity" would do the trick here nicely. But alas, there is truly nothing like "Gravity" on the list of previous winners—until we swim over to the best documentary category. There we find "The Silent World," the 1956 winner that revealed a world beneath the waves that almost nobody had seen.

Drake does not find your antics amusing, Macklemore. The fellow Grammy nominee for best rap album tells Rolling Stone he thought Macklemore's text-message apology for his win over Kendrick Lamar was "wack as [bleep]." To name just Kendrick? That [bleep] made me feel funny," he said. "No, in that case, you robbed everybody. We all need text messages!" We'll be happy to pass along your digits, Drake, if you'd like to share them ...

All of the feels

THE DIGIT
50

That's how many songs with the word "love" in their title Billboard magazine ranked in honor of Valentine's Day. Tracks 1-5 are, in order: "Endless Love" by Diana Ross and Lionel Richie, "I'll Make Love To You" by Boyz II Men, "We Found Love" by Rihanna featuring Calvin Harris, "How Deep Is Your Love?" by the Bee Gees and "Silly Love Songs" by Wings. Get your playlist queued up now.

The other gals

Will Ferrell is boldly going where few men have gone before—into the world of female comics. His Gary Sanchez production company, also driven by Adam McKay and Chris Henchy, is creating a new female-driven arm, thr.

com reports. Gloria Sanchez Productions will focus on woman-led TV shows and movies, and be headed by Jessica Elbaum, a Gary Sanchez executive. We're pre-emptively holding our sides from laughter.

How CBS met Greta Gerwig

Bye-bye, Josh Radnor. Hellooooo, Greta Gerwig. CBS on Wednesday announced that the "Frances Ha" Golden Globe nominee will play the lead on its "How I Met Your Mother" spinoff, "How I Met Your Dad." She'll play Sally, a newly married woman who has no idea where her life is going. Based on the fact that CBS probably wants the show to last more than one episode, said husband probably is not the dad.

76

That's how many weeks Imagine Dragons' "Radioactive" has been in the Billboard Hot 100, tying a record set by Jason Mraz's "I'm Yours" in 2008-2009. The track currently sits at No. 23, which we imagine (har) means it's on the way to a new crown.

THE QUOTE

“On my close-up, she's like, 'Ow, too hard, too hard. You're getting too into it.' I was like, 'Oh, sorry, sorry, sorry, babe. I didn't mean to.'”

—Evan Peters, to Vulture, on the difficulty of filming his “American Horror Story: Coven” choking scene with fiancée Emma Roberts. No further questions about their sex life were asked, which, good call.

TAKE A SEAT

Jimmy Fallon better watch his back. Seth Meyers on Wednesday released the full lineup for his first week as host of “Late Night” via Instagram, and we're not gonna act like we're not impressed. Here's who we'll be laughing to/at/with:

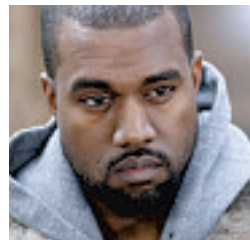

FEB. 24 Amy Poehler and Vice President Joe Biden, with musical guest A Great Big World

FEB. 25 Kanye West and Robyn Doolittle

FEB. 26 Kelly Ripa, with musical guest Brad Paisley

FEB. 27 Lena Dunham and Anthony Mackie, with musical guest John Mayer Trio

FEB. 28 Ian McKellen, Patrick Stewart, Sophia Bush and Michael Che
